Food and family come first at Nonno's Cucina

BY PAULA BENSON
The Vermont Journal

LUDLOW, Vt. – The Italian word for grandfather is “nonno.” “Cucina” is Italian for kitchen, but the word holds meaning beyond being just a place to cook. In Italy, the kitchen is the heart of a home, a place for family to spend time together sharing meals, stories, and love.

When Mark and Jim Etheridge hung the sign for Nonno's Cucina at the front door of 47 Depot Street in Ludlow, opening during a snowstorm in January, the community showed up, eager for some authentic Italian family recipes. The brothers did not disappoint.

Serving New York-style pizza, calzones, 16-inch grinders, pasta, and sweet treats like cannoli and Italian pastries, Nonno's Cucina uses selectively chosen, fresh ingredients, and their bread and pizza dough are made in house. Mark, Nonno's chef and the creative wizard behind the menu and kitchen operations, said, “We focus on the food, the freshness, [and] the quality. Most everything is scratch, like our pizza dough [and] meatballs – all of those things are made daily.”

Mark and Jim's grandparents emigrated to the U.S. from Italy. The original meatball recipe came from their grandmother, and Mark said hers were the best. “Second best was our mother's,” he added.

While most recipes have been passed down through the family, the pizza is Mark's creation. “The pizza is me,” Mark stated. “It took me probably six years to get that pizza to where it is today.” The result: an award-winning recipe for a deliciously crispy, thin crust, New York-style pie. Some of the special ingredients are super-secret and somewhat difficult to source, say the brothers, but for now they have that figured out.

Growing up in Barrington, R.I., the brothers worked in pizza places as young teens washing dishes and bussing tables. Mark said when he was barely 15, he went to the restaurant owner and gave him an offer. “I will work for free if you teach me how to cook in the kitchen.” His proposal was accepted, and he stayed on for several years, eventually earning a salary and honing his skills.

Rhode Island's pizza is traditionally a Greek-style pan pizza, but Mark wanted to introduce a different method, which became popular locally. Other menu items come straight out of Rhode Island too, like Nonno's Famous Pizza Chips, crispy, bite-sized mini-pizza snacks that sell out every day.

A regionally specific type of hot dog called a “New York System Wiener” is a menu highlight and has prompted customers to ask, “Are you guys from Rhode Island?”

The recipe originated in Providence, and has likely never been served within the Ludlow, Vt., restaurant scene. A mix of quality veal, pork, and beef, the hot dog is cooked on a flat griddle, served in a steamed, buttery bun with mustard, and topped with a kicky meat sauce, chopped onions, and celery salt. “That's considered ‘the works,’” said Jim. Customers are welcome to try any combination.

In Rhode Island, Mark and Jim were active members of their community, working with local Little Leagues and soccer organizations to offer discount pizzas dropped off at the field right after games, and they are bringing that spirit with them to Vermont. “It's been great,” said Jim. “The people are awesome in this town...and the surrounding towns.”

Jim is a 29-year retired Army veteran, and the restaurant offers a discount to vets, as well as police and fire department personnel.

Jim was the first to hear about the restaurant for sale in Ludlow, and he called Mark with an idea. It was not long after that the brothers moved with their families to the Green Mountain State and opened Nonno's Cucina.

Just three months in, Mark and Jim are already planning to grow the business. They want to expand their catering services and potentially purchase a food truck. Jim said eventually he would like to be able to offer their freshly baked bread to other restaurants, and one day move Nonno's to another location while keeping the spot on Depot Street open as a bakery.

Mark added, “We are always looking [to hire people], and I'm willing to train from the ground up. I think

The cotillion continues under new direction

BY SHAWN TAE WEBB
The Vermont Journal

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – The longstanding tradition of the cotillion continues! The competition of dance and etiquette, historically held by Springfield Hospital, is now under the direction of Joey Clafin, who runs her own in-home child care center, Happy Feet, and co-owns JC's Market and Deli with her husband, John. Clafin reported that she appreciates help from her husband, behind the scenes assistance from Tammy Stagner, and continued support from photographer Marie Laplante.

When Clafin learned that the hospital was discontinuing the Apple Blossom Cotillion, she didn't miss a beat in picking up where they left off. “I wanted to keep it going,” she said happily. She volunteered for the event for four years, when her kids were young and participating as little contestants. Now, she has high school seniors working in her store, and a daughter who is a senior, and didn't want to see the tradition go.

Clafin admitted there is a lot of commitment to the event, but, though she and her husband are both working two full-time jobs, she is excited to continue.

Playfully called “The Last Dance...Senior Style,”

Clafin says the event is the seniors' last hurrah before graduation, a new Springfield tradition. The theme is “The Mix Up,” incorporating multiple genres of music. Though Clafin likes a good theme, she couldn't settle on just one, so there's a little R&B, hip-hop, contemporary, and country. There will be some line dancing, and there's some comedy to it, Clafin added. There is sure to be a performance to please everyone in the audience.

The Last Dance will be held customarily on Friday, May 1, and Saturday, May 2, at Riverside Middle School, at 7 p.m. both evenings. There are seven senior couples participating this year, from Claremont and Springfield, and 11 little contestant couples. On Friday, they will name a Miss Congeniality and Mister Congeniality, and Most Improved. On Saturday, a queen and her court will be announced.

The proceeds from ticket sales will go directly back to some of those competing. The queen and two members of her court will be awarded scholarships to use for higher education as they choose, such as college, trade school, or textbooks. Other funds will benefit the All-4-One after-school and summer program, in which many of the contestants are enrolled.

Clafin said some of the leftover proceeds could even be used to help cut costs, and be put back into the event next year for decorations and props, confirming, “1,000%,” she plans to continue the beloved tradition.

Tickets are discounted for seniors and students, and can be pre-purchased at www.clover.com/pay-widgets/ee0d7682-91a4-4863-9fdb-ca99e688d549 for students or www.clover.com/pay-widgets/d8df5ad4-f524-4ae2-b9c8-fd33add91bf0 for all others. You can also purchase tickets at the door for the May 1 and 2 shows.

Ludlow approves grant bid

BY NICK GIBERTI
The Vermont Journal

LUDLOW, Vt. – The first meeting of the Ludlow Selectboard since March's Town Meeting was held on Monday, April 6, and served as the board's annual reorganizational meeting. Brett Sanderson was once again appointed board chair, and Justin Hyjek vice chair. Meetings will continue to be held on the first Monday of every month, at 6 p.m., in the Ludlow Town Hall auditorium, with the third Monday reserved as the alternate date.

The board then appointed nonelected town officials, a process which is often largely a formality. However, when it came time to appoint members to the planning commission, on which there were two four-year terms up for reappointment as well as the remainder of a term ending in 2028 vacated by Ryan Silvestri, it became clear that there were more applicants than available positions on the commission.

Scott Baitz initially suggested reappointing incumbents Jean Strong and Judy Pullinen to these positions, though, when a motion to this effect was presented, it was met with pushback from some residents present at the meeting. Resident Alan Couch requested that the board consider each position individually and consider all potential applicants. Resident Eric Alden concurred, telling the board, “The worst thing you can say or do is ‘that's the way we've always done it’”

“I'd ask that you consider what is really going to make the board work best for the town,” Alden continued.

Taking this feedback into consideration, the board rejected the motion to reappoint both incumbents. Board member George Tucker made a motion to appoint two new members, Matthew Bellatoni and Ed D'Attavio, in their places. Hyjek, however, felt that one incumbent should likely remain for the sake of consistency, and suggested keeping Pullinen in place of Bellatoni. Tucker amended his motion as such, and the motion passed. Noah Schmidt, who serves on the selectboard, was appointed to fill the remainder of Silvestri's term.

The board also addressed bids for the $75,000 Better Connections grant the town was awarded by the state. According to the state website, the Better Connections program “provides municipalities the opportunity to engage in master planning efforts that evaluate multimodal transportation options, community development, and water quality improvements.” Ludlow's request for proposal outlines its goals for the grant-funded project as follows: “(1) Develop a comprehensive parking and access management strategy to improve safety and support businesses. (2) Foster equitable, walkable, and transit-friendly infrastructure through complete streets initiatives. (3) Identify redevelopment and infill opportunities that expand housing and economic options. (4) Integrate resilience, wayfinding, and placemaking into long-term planning.”

Town Manager Penny Wu informed the board that the town had received 11 bids, and that a committee made up of herself, Planning and Zoning Director Erin Ladd, Mount Ascutney Regional Commission representative Otis Ellms-Munroe, and Grants Coordinator Cherry Nicoll had reviewed and ranked each bid. The committee selected a bid submitted by SE Group in the amount of $74,945. The majority of the bids were within this same price range, apart from one lower and one higher bid, but Wu said that what made SE Group stand out was their experience working with ski resort towns, such as Lake Placid, Colo., and Lake Placid, N.Y. In particular, Wu said she appreciated that SE Group's bid was the only one in which the work was slated to be completed prior to the beginning of the ski season, when traffic in Ludlow increases substantially. Other bids, Wu said, had work continuing into December and, in some cases, January, which would be disruptive to the town's roads and traffic patterns during the highest-traffic portion of the year. Ladd also informed the board that SE Group has worked with the Town of Chester on their own Better Connections grant, as well as on a housing feasibility study. The board approved the committee's recommendation, awarding the project to SE Group.

Finally, Wu informed the board that the town and village merger packet has been delivered to Montpelier, and that “there is hope that we can get this passed this legislative session.” If that happens, the merger will take effect on July 1, 2027. It had been previously speculated that the merger would not be approved by the legislature until the 2027 session, meaning it would not take effect until 2028.

The Ludlow Selectboard will next meet on Monday, May 4, at 6:30 p.m., in the Ludlow Town Hall auditorium.

Buttermilk Falls high-angle rope rescue operation

LUDLOW, Vt. – One person was successfully rescued Saturday afternoon following a fall at Buttermilk Falls using high-angle rope rescue equipment and personnel with specialized technical rescue training.

On April 18, at approximately 3:11 p.m., the Ludlow Ambulance Service and Ludlow Fire Department were dispatched to Buttermilk Falls for a report of an injured subject with a possible dislocated shoulder. The patient's exact location was initially unknown but was reported to be on the side of the river and not in the water. Due to Ludlow Ambulance's on-duty crew being committed to another emergency, the Springfield Fire Department was requested to the scene with an ambulance at the paramedic level.

Ludlow Fire personnel arrived at 3:31 p.m. and located an adult male who had fallen down the rocks and landed on a boulder in the lower falls. Due to the patient's location and terrain hazards, Chester Fire Department was requested to assist with rope-rescue operations, and to provide additional resources in case swift-water rescue capabilities became necessary.

Working in coordination with Springfield's medical crew and utilizing rope rescue equipment, Ludlow personnel accessed, stabilized, and prepared the patient for removal from the hazard area. Upon arrival, Chester personnel assisted directly with the technical rescue operation. Due to the extent of the injuries and the terrain involved, the patient was packaged in a Stokes litter and vertically raised to the trail. At approximately 5:07 p.m., the patient had been removed from the hazard area, carried to the trailhead, and transferred to Springfield Ambulance for transport to the hospital.

Ludlow Fire and Ambulance personnel would like to remind the public of the hazards associated with the rocks and edges in the Buttermilk Falls area. Slippery surfaces, steep terrain, and current water flow and temperatures can quickly create dangerous conditions. Visitors are encouraged to wear proper footwear, remain aware of their surroundings, and let someone know their plans when exploring alone.

We would like to thank Springfield Fire Department and Chester Fire Department for their assistance and continued professionalism during this incident.

Through the efforts of Okemo Valley Technical Rescue, Ludlow Fire and Ambulance, along with partner agencies, continues to improve technical rescue capabilities across the region. Last week, 15 personnel from member agencies completed swift-water technician training, and during the first week of May an additional 15 personnel will complete rope rescue operations training as part of an ongoing initiative to strengthen regional emergency response capabilities and improve public safety.

For more information, please contact Ludlow Fire and Ambulance Department Chief Ben Whalen at bwhalen@ludlow.vt.us or 802-952-3942.

Indivisible's May Day celebration

CHESTER, Vt. – Join the newly organized Two Rivers Area Indivisible chapter on the Chester Green as it celebrates and supports organized labor and working families on Friday, May 1. For much of the day we will emphasize the positive impacts workers bring to our communities, as well as honoring those who have pledged to boycott work, school, and big-box shopping on May Day.

Continuing the May Day tradition of highlighting social justice issues like women's and workers' rights, equitable medical care for all, and the connection between strong unions and a strong democracy, this year's May Day will also provide a wide range of activities. In addition to music and food, there will be a "knit-in" for people who work with yarn, games such as cornhole, a Maypole, and information about area resources that support workers' and other social justice issues.

Between now and May 1, you'll notice a variety of May Day-related reminders around town. Feel free to invite others to join us at the May Day event, and to bring your own pro-workers and pro-social justice signs and activities. For more information, email styeve35@gmail.com.

The evening will also include a silent auction, catering by Brownsville Butcher & Pantry, and a cash bar provided by the Hartness House. We invite guests to come dressed in the spirit of the evening with their best Kentucky Derby hats or attire. Prizes will be awarded for Best Dressed and Best Derby Hat.

CCCD to host turtle workshops

WALPOLE, N.H. – The Cheshire County Conservation District (CCCD) is pleased to announce the next workshops in the development of a regional turtle conservation initiative. Partners collaborating on the effort are the New Hampshire Association of Conservation Commissions (NHACC), the Harris Center for Conservation Education, the New Hampshire Fish & Game Department, the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service, the New Hampshire Department of Environmental Services, and Moosewood Ecological.

Of the 356 species of turtles worldwide, approximately 61% are threatened or already extinct. The southwestern region of New Hampshire, specifically Cheshire County, is habitat to a wide range of turtle species, from stable populations to turtle populations at risk. At-risk species include the spotted turtle, the wood turtle, and Blanding's turtle.

Local turtle populations are at risk in our region due to loss of habitat from development; mortalities from road crossings; and climate-related impacts on wetland habitats, nesting sites, and migratory corridors.

This exciting initiative seeks to support research-identified strategies for supporting turtle populations and by increasing turtle literacy throughout our region and beyond.

The first workshop, "Making Your Turtle Sightings Count," will be held on Tuesday, May 12, from 5:30-6:30 p.m., via Zoom. It's always exciting to encounter a turtle in the wild, but did you know that it's also an opportunity to contribute to turtle conservation? Join New Hampshire Fish & Game turtle biologist Josh Megysey and Harris Center ecologist Nate Marchessault to learn how you can turn your turtle photos into data that can be used for research and conservation. Learn more and register at www.harriscenter.org/events/making-your-turtle-sightings-count.

The second workshop, "Land Management Practices for New Hampshire

Turtles," will be held Monday, June 8, from 3-5 p.m., at Reservoir Woods, 44 Reservoir Road in Walpole, N.H. Join us for a walking tour at Reservoir Woods, while learning about various turtle habitat management practices on the property, how they support turtle populations, and ways to implement practices on your property. Visit www.cheshireconservation.org/event-details/land-management-practices-for-new-hampshire-turtles-a-turtle-wildlife-workshop to learn more or register.

Springfield Community Chorus spring concerts

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – This spring, the Springfield Community Chorus is singing two concerts: the first on Saturday, April 25, at 7 p.m., at Immanuel Episcopal Church, 20 Church Street in Bellows Falls, Vt.; the second on Sunday, April 26, at 3 p.m., at the First Congregational Church, 77 Main Street in Springfield, Vt. Admission is free, but donations are appreciated.

This spring is full of new music and new voices for the chorus. Some new songs include "More Waters Rising," a song that speaks to the ecological and social changes sweeping our world today. It was written by Saro Lynch-Thomason in 1986.

A tune newly adapted to choral music by Jeffery L. James is a traditional South African song, "Tshosholozza." A choral adaptation of the song "Make Them Hear You," from the musical "Ragtime," was written by Stephen Flaherty in 1996. The concert ends with a lively "Dies Irae" from a requiem written by Michael John Trotta published in 2020.

Not only is the concert full of new music and new voices, the chorus has a new director, Emma Erwin. Erwin is a choral and instrument conductor, clarinetist, and vocalist based in Springfield, Vt. She holds a degree in music education from Keene State College, and has experience teaching and codirecting various choral festivals. She is a wonderful fit for our chorus as it moves forward.

In this unique, shared-concert format, each performer will take turns presenting original songs while also joining one another on stage, offering audiences a dynamic and spontaneous musical experience.

Freebo, a folk, rock, and blues icon, is widely known for his decade-long tenure as bassist with Bonnie Raitt. His distinctive fretless bass has been featured on recordings by John Mayall; Ringo Starr; Crosby, Stills & Nash; Maria Muldaur; Joe Walsh; and Dr. John. A multi-award-winning songwriter, Freebo has appeared on "Saturday Night Live," "The Muppet Show," "The Midnight Special," and in concert with The Legendary Spinal Tap.

Howe, winner of Best Female Artist at the International Acoustic Music Awards, captivates listeners with the natural beauty of her voice and finely crafted songs. Her latest album, "Circumstance," produced by Freebo and recorded at the legendary FAME Studios in Muscle Shoals, Ala., showcases her poetic lyricism and melodic depth.

Robbins is an emerging voice in contemporary folk – an "old soul" troubadour whose thoughtful songwriting has earned national attention. Touring widely behind his 2025 album, "So Much I Still Don't See," Robbins has been named one of Atwood Magazine's Artists to Watch, appeared on "The Voice," and shared stages with artists including Jason Mraz and Liz Longley. He has also performed at major festivals, such as Kerrville, Falcon Ridge, and Wheatland.

Neal, a Boston-based singer-songwriter originally from Nashville, brings award-winning vocals and uplifting, peace-centered themes to her music. She has received national recognition for her performances at leading folk festivals, including Kerrville Folk Festival, Rocky Mountain Folks Festival, and the Telluride Bluegrass Festival.

The concert begins at 7:30 p.m., with doors opening at 6:45 p.m., at Next Stage Arts, 15 Kimball Hill in Putney, Vt. Tickets are discounted if purchased in advance. Tickets and more information are available at www.nextstagearts.org.

Springfield Hospital director of marketing speaks to Ludlow Rotary LUDLOW, Vt. – Tonia Fleming, director of marketing and planning at Springfield Hospital, spoke to the Ludlow Rotary Club about the challenges facing Vermont's hospitals in general and Springfield Hospital in particular.

Challenges facing Vermont health care providers include a shortage of workers, reimbursements that don't cover costs, increased patient complexity, and an aging population, among others. Recently, 30% of the patients in the emergency room were there for mental health or substance abuse issues, including a high number of young people.

There are many other challenges as well that are not controllable by the hospital, such as transportation, day-care challenges, and affordability.

There are, however, state initiatives, including regional efforts, to plan for the future and address rising costs. Springfield Hospital is collaborating with Grace Cottage, Brattleboro, and Ascutney hospitals to address broader issues facing all the hospitals and health care facilities in Vermont. The group is looking into whether they can share staff or recruit from local nursing schools to avoid paying for traveling nurses, which are expensive, among other initiatives.

Springfield Hospital serves a six-county service area, as they have been doing for the past 106 years. It is hoping to share some of the $195 million of federal health-care dollars recently allotted to Vermont. Its mission is to provide personalized, high-quality care in its niche market of 25 beds for short-term care.

Fleming encouraged rotarians to look at costs in advance on the Springfield Hospital website and compare those with other facilities. She indicated their facilities provide a wide and comprehensive range of specialized clinical services, from routine and complex surgery, to day-case procedures, diagnostic services, and physiotherapy. She encouraged attendees to stay local for care.

Cost and convenience are Springfield Hospital's core strengths, giving them the ability to compete with other health care providers in the future.

Serving Ludlow, Mt. Holly, Belmont, Cavendish, Proctorsville & Plymouth

HCRS welcomes Jed Kingman as director of IT

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – Health Care and Rehabilitation

Services (HCRS), southeastern Vermont's non-profit community mental health agency, is pleased to announce the appointment of Jed Kingman as director of information technology.

Kingman joined HCRS in December as interim chief information officer and has since brought a proactive approach to strengthening the organization's technology systems. During his time in the interim role, he has worked closely with teams across the agency to better understand operational needs and identify practical solutions that support both staff and the people HCRS serves.

"Jed has demonstrated a strong ability to listen, collaborate, and lead with intention," said Anne Bilotreau, CEO of HCRS. "His expertise and commitment to building reliable, user-friendly systems have already made a meaningful impact across our organization."

With more than 18 years of experience in information technology leadership, Kingman previously served as chief technology officer at a health care company in Concord, N.H. His background includes systems design, infrastructure improvement, and operational efficiency, with a focus on making complex systems more accessible and effective.

In his role as director of information technology, Kingman is focused on improving system reliability, simplifying processes, and ensuring that technology enhances day-to-day operations. He emphasizes a collaborative, hands-on approach, and believes technology should ease burdens and allow staff to spend more time supporting people.

"I'm focused on making technology easier, more reliable, and genuinely helpful for the people who use it every day," said Kingman. "When systems work well, they support everything else, allowing staff to focus on what matters most: the people we serve."

Kingman's appointment reflects HCRS' continued commitment to strengthening infrastructure and equipping staff with tools that are efficient, dependable, and aligned with the organization's mission.

Charlestown Health accessibility upgrades

CHARLESTOWN, N.H. – North Star Health hosted community members at Charlestown Health Center to celebrate new accessibility upgrades to the facility. They were joined by supporters of the project New Hampshire Healthy Families, The Dee Foundation, Claremont Savings Bank, and accessibility advocates Diane and Justin Milliken.

In 2024, Dianne Milliken, mother to Justin Milliken and a dedicated advocate for accessibility in all places, approached North Star Health with a vision. She shared her ideas on how to make Charlestown Health Center, her son's new medical home after aging out of pediatrics, a more welcoming and accessible space for patients like Justin to receive care.

Fast forward to April 8: North Star invited the community to see the room that was outfitted with an adjustable bed and electric Hoyer lift to make exams more comfortable and functional for wheelchair users and clinical staff. This project was supported by New Hampshire Health Families, The Dee Foundation, and Claremont Savings Bank Foundation.

Before cutting the ribbon on the new setup, Dianne shared what these new features meant: "This isn't just about a space – it's about dignity, inclusion, and making sure that Justin and others with unique needs are seen, valued, and able to fully participate in the care they deserve."

CEO Joshua Dufresne also gave thanks to Dianne and Justin, the generous supporters of the project, and the community for their support, while sharing some context:

"Charlestown Health Center is our only facility that was originally designed to be a health center. All others are retrofitted. You'll notice there are no stairs here, that's by design. I'm thrilled to be taking that accessibility a step further with the unveiling of this room for patients who need a higher level of accessibility."

This project is only the start. North Star is committed to making our facilities accessible to all. North Star is creating a wish list of projects. To donate to more projects like this and follow along with this journey, visit www.northstarfqc.org/accessible.

Springfield Hospital General Surgery

"Right at the start of basketball season, I had to have emergency appendix surgery, and I was honestly worried about how it would affect my ability to get back on the court.

The care I received was incredible—from the surgery itself to the support during recovery. Dr. Bennett was personable, took time to make sure that I understood every step, and helped me safely return to playing. I was back with my teammates sooner than expected, and I feel strong and confident.

I'm really grateful for how well they took care of me."

Norman Susee, 1938-2026

WALPOLE, N.H. – Norman Susee, of Walpole, N.H., passed away peacefully on April 9, 2026. He was 87 years old.

Norm was born in 1938, in Keene, N.H., to Joseph and Winifred (Tuttle) Susee. He grew up in Keene, carrying with him the values of a small-town upbringing that would shape the rest of his life: hard work, kindness, and a deep sense of community. He later proudly served his country in the United States Air Force and was stationed in Dover, Del.

Before his time in the service, he could often be found playing guitar alongside his brother, Harold Buskey. After returning home to New Hampshire, that love of country music only grew stronger. He went on to form The Cousin Bros, a band that became a familiar and welcome presence throughout the region, first performing as Norm & Jerry (Brown). What started as a shared passion turned into something much bigger – bringing country music, laughter, and connection to countless people over the years. If you knew Norm, you knew country music was never far behind.

The band's journey brought them to memorable stages, including the Cheshire Fairgrounds, where they opened for country legends like Barbara Mandrell, Sylvia, Billy “Crash” Craddock, and Webb Pierce. For Norm, those moments were special – but just as meaningful were the nights spent playing country music in local clubs, community halls, and anywhere people gathered to enjoy good music.

At one point, his passion for music took him to Nashville, Tenn., where Norm and Jerry recorded two original songs, “Tennessee Street Runner” and “Eat Your Heart Out,” written with their good friend Art Cottrell. When “Eat Your Heart Out” reached number one on radio stations in several southern states, it became a proud milestone in a life already rich with music.

Over the years, Norm shared the stage with many talented local musicians, including Davey Schroeder, Dave Lake, Dave Colburn, Roy Carroll, and Jerry Scadova. The Cousin Bros became well known for playing at places like The Valley Green, Stella's Cellar, The Hungry Lion, and The Top Hat, as well as at The Moose, the American Legion, and the VFW. They played at weddings, anniversaries, and gatherings of all kinds – anywhere people wanted to celebrate. Long-time drummers Mel Skinner and Tom Brown kept the rhythm going. Sometimes, they would be joined by Roy Carroll on the fiddle or the guest voices of Anita Pelkey, Marie Norway, or Joy Goodnow, which added to the band's unmistakable sound. He later played in the band Playing Possum with Phil Bond, Mike Mialkowski, and Toby and Terry Taylor.

But for Norm, it was just as much about the people as it was the music. He loved seeing a room come alive, and watching others smile, dance, and forget their worries for a while. And if you were lucky enough to hear him play, you probably remember how he liked to end the night: with the song “The Party's Over.” It was a signature moment, one that now feels especially fitting. Though the party is over, the joy he brought to so many will not be forgotten.

Outside of music, Norm was the kind of person everyone could count on. He had a gift for fixing things; if something was broken, chances are Norm could make it work again. In his later years, he worked at L&B Trucking in Westminster, Vt., where that dependability and skill never went unnoticed. He gave his time and talents freely, always ready to lend a hand. He also found peace in simpler moments, especially when fishing. Even though he rarely kept any for himself, he took real pleasure in sharing his catch with others – a small but perfect example of his generous spirit.

At the center of everything was his family. Norm deeply loved his wife, his children, and his grandchildren. He showed that love not just in words, but in the quiet, steady ways he showed up – through his actions, his reliability, and his presence. He will be remembered for his country music, his work ethic, and, most of all, his kindness and willingness to help anyone in need.

He was predeceased by his parents, Joseph and Winifred Susee; his brothers, Myron, Donald, Harold, Allen, and Bert Buskey; his son Alan Susee; and his grandsons, Jeremiah Lawrence and Keith Norman Snide.

He is survived by his loving wife, Calla Susee; his sons William and Kenneth, of Dover, Del., and Robert Susee (Larry), of Albany, N.Y.; and four stepchildren, whom he loved as his own: Brenda Vandusen, of Xenia, Ohio, Wanda Lawrence (Kevin), of Rockingham, Vt., Pamela Howe (Jim), of Westminster, Vt., and Kevin Rumrill, of Lebanon, N.H. He is also survived by his sisters, Shirley Page, of Swanzey, N.H., Barbara Shay, of Winchester, N.H., and Audrey Crosby, of Plymouth, N.H.; along with many grandchildren, great-grandchildren, nieces, and nephews.

And though the final song has been played, the country music he loved – and the love he gave – will continue to echo in the hearts of all who knew him.

There will be a family graveside service on Saturday, April 25, at 12 p.m. Please join us for a celebration of Norm's life at The Moose Club, 59 Westminster Street, Bellows Falls, Vt., on April 25, at 1 p.m. Light refreshments will be provided.

Dear Editor,

Fifty-five years ago John Lennon asked us to "Imagine," to be dreamers. Today, corrupt, authoritarian leaders draw us into wars and coerce corporations to support them to get favorable government contracts and protections.

He asked us to "Imagine all the people living life in peace." We can't just dream or imagine, we need to act. Somewhere between 8 and 9 million people took to the streets for No Kings Day 3, not just in the United States, but around the world. The citizens of Hungary acted, went to the polls, and voted out a dictator who had oppressed and suppressed them for 16 years.

The next step is for the people of the United States to stage a walkout to take power away from the corporations and billionaires who support corrupt leadership in this country. May Day! This is a national movement.

On May 1, (1) don't order or buy anything from Amazon, Target, Home Depot, or other large corporate stores or gas stations; (2) shop locally and use cash instead of using a credit or debit card that benefits banks; (3) support workers, not billionaires; and (4) find a May Day Strong event in your community and participate. On May 1, let's honor the legacy of workers.

Find an Indivisible organization in your area to join and build a community that works together to protect our future.

As John Lennon said, "I hope someday you'll join us / And the world will live as one...A brotherhood of man."

Sincerely,
Bill Keating
Indivisible Greater Falls

Dear Editor,

With the warmer weather arriving, we are seeing more bicycles on the roadways. I would like to remind the children throughout the county of some bicycle tips, so they will be safe riding on the roadways. These tips are also important for all cyclists, young and old.

Wear a proper bicycle helmet. When possible, wear bright colored clothing. Have a front white light and a red reflector on the back. Know and obey all traffic laws. Ride to the right. Basically, obey all the rules as if you were driving a car. Yield to pedestrians. Slow down and be cautious at intersections. Best to walk your bike when using a crosswalk. Don't wear headphones while riding.

Beware of riding in motorists' blind spots. Use hand signals. If riding with others, ride in single file. Keep at least a car door's width from cars, even when going past parked vehicles. Regularly check your bicycle, making sure everything is working. When possible, ride with another person. Be safe and careful!

Sincerely,
Claude E. Weyant, Captain/Chief Deputy Windsor County Sheriff's Department

Green Bee Lawn using organic products, electric equipment

CHESTER, Vt. – Green Bee Lawn & Garden is different from most lawn care companies. Tim Roper launched the business in 2020 as a one-person “retirement gig,” envisioned as something that would keep him busy three days per week, let him get some exercise, bring in a few extra dollars, and show the world that combining organic lawn care practices with commercial electric lawn care equipment culminates in top quality results.

Now, six years later, Green Bee is a growing father-and-son operation, continuing to show that lawn care doesn't require running dirty, loud, gas- or diesel-powered equipment in order to keep lawns looking great. Their equipment is so quiet that customers are never bothered when the crew shows up and gets to work. Using only organic lawn treatments also removes any concerns around people, pets, and wildlife using the property.

The company's growth is a result of their reputation for producing first-quality results. Customers have come to rely on Green Bee in ever increasing numbers to provide them with great-looking lawns and additional services, including new lawn installations, hardscapes, light excavating, driveway repairs, drainage work, and expert fencing installations thanks to Jim Roper's dozen years of experience in the fencing industry. Jim has managed fence installations ranging from back yards, to horse properties, to a VA hospital, large solar arrays, and even a couple of airports! His expertise shows clearly in the end product – attractive, perfectly installed fences that customers rave about.

If you're looking for a company you can rely on to help manage and improve your grounds in the most thoughtful ways, Green Bee Lawn & Garden will treat you right.

SEON receives grant from Vermont Community Foundation

REGION – The Vermont Community Foundation has awarded the Sustainable Energy Outreach Network (SEON) a $7,500 grant to advance SEON's sustainable training standards and opportunities. This grant will be used to support SEON's efforts to implement a registered apprenticeship program for high-performance builders and further SEON's training effort throughout the state. The advisory donor is “Modesty Is My Best Quality Fund.”

SEON's activities can be summarized into three broad categories: (1) recruit young adults and career changers into the carpentry field of high-performance building. There is an acute shortage of carpenters, and SEON's apprenticeship program is designed to close this gap; (2) train the incumbent workforce with the advanced knowledge and skills of building science to meet the challenges of our climate crisis; and (3) retain the workforce through leadership training and organizational consulting that builds a culture of personal mastery, team learning, and shared meaning.

SEON thanks our advisory donor, who shares our commitment to high standards and innovative practices in residential building.

SEON is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit training organization that delivers in-person courses on building science and leadership development throughout Vermont. To learn more and view the 2026 training schedule, visit www.buildingscience.org.

Turn your home into more than one living space

REGION – If you’ve ever caught yourself wishing you had a little more room to spread out, you’re not alone. Whether it’s space for adult children or aging parents, a quiet home office, or adding long-term value to your property, more homeowners are starting to look at accessory dwelling units, or ADUs, as practical ways to make their homes work harder for them.

You might know an ADU by a different name: in-law suite, carriage house, garage apartment, or basement apartment. No matter what you call it, the idea is the same. It’s a smaller, fully functional living space built on the same property as your primary home. Some are detached. Others are built above a garage or finished into an existing basement, as long as there’s a private entrance and essentials like a kitchen, bathroom, and sleeping area.

From a lifestyle standpoint, flexibility is what draws people in. Some homeowners have built one so aging parents could live nearby but still have their own space. Others wanted a dedicated office that didn’t take over the main house. Some decided to rent them out for extra income. It really comes down to what you need and what stage of life you’re in.

Of course, before any construction begins, zoning and local guidelines matter. Cities and counties each have their own rules around size, placement, and usage. A quick check with your local planning department early on can save you time and frustration later.

One of the first questions people ask is how to pay for an ADU. Since building an ADU is considered a major home project, many homeowners look at renovation financing. A renovation loan can let you roll the cost of construction into your mortgage instead of paying for everything out of pocket. There are a few programs designed for projects like this, each with different guidelines depending on the scope and budget.

Another option some homeowners explore is using existing equity through a refinance. The right route depends on timing, how much equity you have, and your overall financial goals. It’s less about steering you one way or the other and more about laying out the options so you can decide what fits best.

Adding a second living space changes how a property functions day to day. It can give family members a place of their own, create room to work, or open the door to rental income, depending on how it’s used. Over time, it may also contribute to overall property value.

With more households planning for multigenerational living and flexible space needs, it’s a conversation that’s coming up more often.

If adding space has been on your mind, even casually, it can help to talk through the numbers and what it might look like before making any big decisions. Sometimes a simple planning conversation is all it takes to see what’s possible and what the next step could look like.

Turning waste into fertilizer

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. – As spring comes around the bend and farmers prepare to apply fertilizers to their emerging crops, we are faced with a global crisis in fertilizers once again, threatening farmers’ livelihoods and food supplies. Global conflicts and energy disruptions continue to expose the fragility of the systems on which modern agriculture depends – systems tied to fossil fuels, international trade routes, and energy-intensive industrial production.

Yet an abundant source of fertilizer is produced every day in our own communities.

Every year, Americans urinate $50 billion worth of nutrients that could replace one-quarter of all synthetic fertilizers used in U.S. agriculture. Yet most of these nutrients are flushed away with drinking water and sent through wastewater systems, where they often contribute to pollution in watersheds rather than nourishing crops.

Two organizations working to change that are Rich

Earth Institute and Brightwater Tools, which are hosting a public open house to share the latest updates from their work advancing nutrient recovery and circular sanitation.

Since 2012, Rich Earth Institute has operated the nation’s first and largest community-scale urine recycling program, safely transforming human urine into fertilizer used by local farms. The nonprofit’s research, education, and demonstration work shows how communities can reclaim nutrients, reduce water pollution, conserve clean water, and support farmers with locally sourced fertilizers.

Brightwater Tools, a company that grew out of Rich Earth’s work, develops practical technologies that enable nutrient recovery systems to be implemented at larger scales. The company designs equipment that transforms diverted urine, full-toilet waste (“blackwater”), and food waste digestate into high-quality fertilizer products, including innovations such as pasteurizers, freeze concentrators, and charcoal filtration systems. They will share highlights from their pilot sites both in the U.S. and across Europe.

Together, these organizations are part of a growing global movement to complete the nutrient cycle by recovering valuable nutrients from waste streams, such as urine, food scraps, and wastewater, helping build more resilient and sustainable food systems.

At the open house, hosted at the two organizations’ joint research center, 355 Old Ferry Road in Brattleboro, on Thursday, April 30, from 4:30-6:30 p.m., visitors will have the opportunity to tour the nation’s first and largest community-scale urine recycling facility; meet engineers, researchers, and educators working at the forefront of nutrient recovery; hear from farmer partners through short videos about on-farm urine fertilizer research; explore innovative nutrient-cycling technologies, including urine-diverting toilets, treatment systems, and fertilizer application equipment; and learn how circular systems can support healthier farms, cleaner waterways, and more resilient communities.

As global disruptions continue to reveal vulnerabilities in our food and infrastructure systems, local solutions like nutrient recycling offer a powerful opportunity to rethink how communities manage resources – and turn waste into abundance.

The difference between prequalified and preapproved

REGION – Prequalification and preapproval are two terms you may hear used interchangeably when shopping for a mortgage, but they are actually two optional steps you can take to start the loan approval process. A mortgage prequalification is usually a much shorter process that requires you to honestly report your own financial information, while a mortgage preapproval typically requires you to submit more documentation, like W-2s, to verify your income and assets, making it a lengthier process.

Neither prequalification nor preapproval will guarantee you a loan, but getting prequalified or preapproved before you start searching for a home can help you more easily find a home you love within your budget. A preapproval may also make the process of completing a full loan application much easier and faster, because you'll already have submitted a lot of necessary information to the lender.

While both prequalification and preapproval from a lender help identify your price range, a preapproval letter can signal to your real estate agent and sellers that you're serious about buying a home. Agents often require a preapproval letter, because it is a strong indication that you are a qualified buyer and can make a competitive offer.

Prequalification

Prequalification means you may satisfy a lender's general criteria for a mortgage, based on your self-reported financial information, like income, assets, credit, and debt. Prequalification can be as simple as a short phone conversation with a lender. Afterward, the lender may or may not provide you with a letter detailing the types of loans you may qualify for and the loan amount you may be able to borrow.

Prequalification is just a starting point. According to a Zillow survey, about a quarter of prospective buyers who have not yet started working with an agent reported getting prequalified (27%).

If you're unsure where to begin in your homebuying journey, or aren't even sure what homes you can afford, start the prequalification process to learn more about your loan eligibility.

Keep in mind, a mortgage prequalification is only as accurate as the information you provide the lender. That's why those who are ready to buy in the near future often go straight to preapproval, which is a more comprehensive verification process.

Preapproval

A mortgage preapproval means you have a conditional commitment from a lender to approve you for a loan as long as you continue to meet their conditions by the time you close on the home. You'll need to provide the lender with documents like bank statements, W-2s, and pay stubs. The lender will also run a credit check, which may show as a soft or hard inquiry on your credit report, depending on the lender's preapproval process.

Once preapproved, you'll receive a preapproval letter detailing the loan amount, types of loan programs you may qualify for (e.g., conventional, FHA, VA), and an estimated interest rate and annual percentage rate. Assuming you continue to meet the lender's financial loan qualifications during the underwriting process, your lender will be able to issue a final loan approval. You will still have to complete a loan application before being fully approved for a specific loan program.

A preapproval letter accompanying your purchase offer suggests to the seller that if they were to accept your offer, financing is more likely to go through than without one. Your offer becomes more compelling. According to Zillow's Consumer Housing Trends Report 2022, 85% of sellers say that they prefer to accept an offer from a buyer who is preapproved.

Difference between preapproved and prequalified

A prequalification can help you prepare to take the next steps towards buying a home and give you a sense of a reasonable budget to stay within when shopping for home. A preapproval gives you a more concrete understanding of your budget, so you can start making offers and can signal to the seller that you are a serious buyer. Here are a few more key comparisons between preapproval and prequalification.

Should I get prequalified or preapproved?

Getting prequalified for a mortgage can be a good starting point if you're a first-time homebuyer, or if you're in the very early stages of considering a home purchase. Most prequalifications don't require a hard credit inquiry, so your credit score won't take a hit if you decide to press pause on buying. And when you decide to move forward with a preapproval, you'll already have a good idea of the lender with whom you'll want to work with.

Either way, if you choose to get prequalified or preapproved, you'll still need to have an offer accepted, a loan application completed, and a purchase contract in place before your lender can fully underwrite and approve your loan.

Why wait to get preapproved or prequalified?

Buyers may want to get prequalified to get a ballpark for their budget and get pre-approved when they're ready to seriously shop and make offers. This is because preapproval letters only last for an average of 45 days. After this period, a new preapproval is typically required, since your financial circumstances could change. For example, you may make new purchases that increase your debt and tighten your house affordability, or you may get a new credit card that causes a hard inquiry on your credit report and lowers your credit score.

With each new preapproval, either a soft or hard inquiry is made on your credit report, depending on the lender's preapproval process. Hard inquiries can affect your credit score over time. Keep in mind that during that 45-day period from the date of your first mortgage credit check, all hard inquiries are consolidated and won't individually impact your credit. If your preapproval expires and you're still actively shopping, reach out to your lender to discuss timing for your next preapproval.

Which is better?

A preapproval letter typically carries more weight than a prequalification, since the preapproval is a conditional commitment from a lender to approve your loan. If you're uncertain which is the best option for you, your moving timeline can be a good indicator of whether you should choose a preapproval or prequalification. If you're fully committed to buying a home, starting the preapproval process first might be the right option for you. If you're curious about whether or not you qualify for a loan and how much you may be eligible to borrow, mortgage prequalification will provide you with helpful information to find a home within your budget.
