Springfield on the Move to hold second annual Festival of Lights

BY LISA STICKNEY

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – Springfield on the Move's (SOM) Festival of Lights is set for Friday, Nov. 20, from 6-9 p.m., at the Great Hall, located at 100 River Street in Springfield. The Holiday Star Program is helping to promote the organization's largest fundraiser of the year. Materials for the project were paid for by donations from last year's event, and the stars are a way to beautify downtown with help from the community.

"The stars are being created by members of the community, and we expect to display more than 35 throughout downtown Springfield," said Vanessa Rebentisch, executive director of Springfield on the Move. "They'll range in size from about 3 to 8 feet, and will be placed in shop windows, on buildings, and in the park."

Installation will happen over the next few weeks, and organizers hope the display brings more people downtown. "Let's light up downtown Springfield together," Rebentisch said.

The Festival of Lights is a wonderful opportunity to come together, celebrate the holiday season, and join Springfield on the Move for a magical evening of festive cheer and dazzling decorations. Live music will be provided by Black River Band, along with light fare and drinks provided by Black Rock Steakhouse. Bring cash to join in on a silent auction and raffle, and bid on items and a chance to win prizes. Tickets can be purchased by emailing springfieldonthemove@gmail.com.

Last year, $25,000 was raised, and this year's goal is to raise $50,000 to establish a permanent endowment for the organization. Past support has already made a difference, helping fill downtown spaces with programming, launch entrepreneur development initiatives, and improve the look of the community through a variety of projects. As a small organization, Springfield on the Move relies heavily on committed sponsors to make this work possible.

Sponsorship and volunteer opportunities for the Festival of Lights are available. To inquire about sponsorship or volunteering, contact Springfield on the Move at the email address above, or call 802-885-1527.

Volunteers Fill the Freezer at Our Place Community Food Center —

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt. – Fourteen volunteers contributed 65 hours of collective work on Thursday, Oct. 8, preparing more than 400 pounds of locally grown food at Harlow Farms Commercial Kitchen for Our Place Community Food Center.

The Fill the Freezer event was organized through Local Food Matters and the Great Falls Food Hub, projects of Sustainable Valley Group (SVG), in partnership with Our Place Community Food Center and the Rockingham Recreation Department.

The volunteer effort had two complementary goals: help Our Place prepare nutritious ingredients for future meals, and build the connections between farms, volunteers, commercial kitchens, cold storage, and community food organizations that SVG is working to strengthen across the region.

The event focused on preparing and preserving local ingredients for Our Place to turn into nutritious meals in the weeks and months ahead. Volunteers spent the afternoon washing, chopping, processing, packaging, and freezing gleaned and donated food for its daily meal service. Pete's Stand donated corn on the cob and a 41-pound Hubbard squash, while Willing Hands gleaned kale from Harlow Farms. Halfway through the afternoon, North Wind Farm delivered a surprise donation of two big boxes of their farm-raised pork sausage and another generous delivery of tomatoes. By the end of the day, the volunteers' efforts produced more than 150 pounds of tomatoes, 21 pounds of kale, 38 pounds of bell peppers, 8 pounds of parsley, and 28 pounds of corn. Altogether, they preserved more than 400 pounds of food grown and raised locally.

"Thank you so much for all the donors and volunteers that made this happen. This is a huge help for Our Place and will go to happily feed our community with the fruits of everyone's efforts," said Dave Billings, executive director of Our Place Community Food Center.

Our Place Community Food Center has reported an approximately 300% increase in demand compared with the previous year and serves roughly 150 to 180 meals daily, even as funding pressures make meeting those needs increasingly difficult.

Fill the Freezer provided immediate practical support while demonstrating a model that could be repeated and expanded. The event brought together resources that already exist in the region and strengthened connections: agricultural products, donated food, volunteer labor, commercial kitchen facilities, freezer capacity, and organizations serving residents experiencing food insecurity. By coordinating these resources, community partners can reduce food waste, make better use of seasonal harvests, support local producers, and increase the capacity of community kitchens.

Fill the Freezer is an example of the collaborative regional food system Sustainable Valley Group is developing through Local Food Matters and the Great Falls Food Hub. Both projects receive general support through the USDA Healthy Food Financing Initiative (HFFI), which helps advance SVG's broader work to strengthen local food infrastructure, markets, and access.

Fill the Freezer itself was a volunteer-led effort supported by these projects, providing an opportunity to see how existing community resources can be connected more effectively. The pilot demonstrates a simple but important principle: A regional food system becomes stronger when its individual parts work together.

Farmers need dependable outlets for their products. Community kitchens need ingredients and preparation capacity. Residents need reliable access to healthy food. Volunteers want meaningful ways to contribute. Commercial kitchens and cold storage facilities provide the physical infrastructure that makes those connections possible.

Rather than building separate solutions for each need, Local Food Matters is working to create a coordinated network that benefits everyone involved.

The Great Falls Food Hub is also advancing a larger vision for the redevelopment of the Island in Bellows Falls into a collaborative regional food-system campus. The vision includes commercial kitchen facilities; food processing and storage infrastructure; distribution, entrepreneurship, and workforce development; and community food access programs. Projects like Fill the Freezer offer practical opportunities to further develop these connections, identify gaps, build relationships, and learn what infrastructure and coordination are needed to expand the model.

The event also demonstrated the value of community participation. In just one afternoon, 14 volunteers contributed the equivalent of more than a week and a half of full-time labor toward preparing food for neighbors.

The longer-term opportunity is to make that kind of collaboration easier, more efficient, and more sustainable through shared infrastructure and coordinated partnerships.

Fill the Freezer demonstrates how community food access and local economic development can reinforce one another. Supporting local agriculture, increasing the use of existing facilities, engaging volunteers, and helping community kitchens meet growing demand are not separate goals. They are interconnected parts of a resilient regional food economy. As the Great Falls Food Hub continues developing its programs and facilities, Sustainable Valley Group and its partners hope to build on lessons from Fill the Freezer to strengthen the connections between local food producers and the communities they serve.

Thanks to this collective generosity, Kurn Hattin exceeded fundraising expectations, raising $36,000.

This outpouring of community support helps fund not only the care of children at Kurn Hattin, but also the experiences and opportunities that help build brighter futures.

Jamaican Jewelz to close Bellows Falls restaurant, continue food truck

BELLOWS FALLS, Vt. – Jamaican Jewelz in Bellows falls announced recently that its brick-and-mortar restaurant, located at 65 The Square, will close. According to a post from the Jamaican Jewelz Facebook page, "After two wonderful years at our brick-and-mortar location in Bellows Falls, we've made the difficult decision not to reopen our restaurant at that location. Rising operating costs and limited customer traffic have made it challenging to grow our business the way we envisioned. While this decision wasn't easy, we believe it's the right step toward a stronger future."

However, they also stressed that they will continue to operate their food truck, adding, "We're going back to our roots and hitting the road with our food truck and trailer, bringing the authentic Jamaican flavors you know and love directly to you."

The post continued, "Thank you for two incredible years of love, encouragement, and support. Every meal purchased, every kind word, and every person who walked through our doors has meant the world to us. We're closing the doors to one chapter, but we're opening the road to so many new opportunities! This isn't goodbye – it's see you on the road!"

Sunrise School founders share mission with Springfield Rotary

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – Habel Ouma and Eunice Rapando, co-founders of the Sunrise School for autistic learners in Kenya, recently presented to the Springfield Rotary Club, sharing the school's mission to expand educational opportunities and improve the lives of autistic children and their families.

The founders were joined by Rotary Past District Governor Bill Stevens, of Bellows Falls, and Wanda Salter, a speech pathologist who has volunteered at the Sunrise School.

The school was established to address the educational needs of autistic children in Kenya, where access to specialized instruction and support services can be limited. Its objectives, as outlined by Ouma, are to provide educational opportunities and hope to autistic children, make educational inclusion possible for more learners, and ease the challenges faced by their families and caregivers.

During the presentation, Rapando described several challenges facing the school, including limited classroom and administrative space, and a spring-fed water system that runs dry for a couple of months each year.

To address these needs, Salter presented the Sunrise School Memorial Project, a $200,000 fundraising effort to improve the school's facilities and provide a more reliable water supply.

Donations can be made at www.thesunriseschool.org by designating contributions to the "Playground/Admin Project."

The presentation highlighted how international partnerships and community support can help expand educational opportunities and improve the lives of autistic children and their families.

The Springfield Rotary Club meets Tuesdays, at 12 p.m., at the SAPCC Workforce Development & Training Center. Visitors and prospective members are welcome. For more information, visit www.springfieldvtrotary.org.

CLAREMONT, N.H. – Join the NH Sneaker Brigade Donut Dash special edition "Spooky Dash." This is the fifth year the brigade is hosting the annual event, which began as a run group for Charlestown residents. The dash was relocated last year to Claremont, as the Arrowhead & Wheelhouse gave it a home. To honor this, the brigade donates funds back to Arrowhead Recreation each year. Funds raised from the event also go to committees like Valentines for Seniors, Easter baskets for the Claremont Soup Kitchen, and, new next year, game nights at Fiske Library. It also partners with organizations including Hike for Mental Health and The Center for Safer Communities.

Whether you're chasing a personal record, enjoying a walk with friends and family, or simply showing up for the donuts, this event is a fun way to support the NH Sneaker Brigade and its mission of promoting health, wellness, and community throughout New Hampshire.

The donut dash will take place on Saturday, Oct. 31, at the Arrowhead Recreational Area in Claremont, N.H. Walkers will start at 9 a.m., and runners will start at 9:15 a.m. Fresh donuts from Allen Brothers will be waiting for all participants at the finish line.

Team competitions are encouraged. Trophies will be awarded to the largest business team, and prizes will be awarded to the largest recreational team. Awards will be presented for male and female age groups, from 11 to 70 and older. Additional fund and unique award categories will also be presented.

Well-behaved, leashed dogs are welcome to participate in the event. Dogs must start at the back of their respective runner or walker group. Please clean up after your pet and keep the course safe and enjoyable for everyone. Families with children are also encouraged to participate, and strollers are welcome. Please note, the course follows a dirt trail, and conditions may include mud, sand, or uneven terrain depending on the weather.

Early registration is discounted at www.runsignup.com/race/NH/Claremont/DonutDashNHSneakerBrigade, with options for runners, youth runners, walkers, and virtual participants. Thanks to a generous grant from the Claremont Savings Bank Foundation, there is a fifth-anniversary registration discount. Discount codes are available while supplies last. The first five registrations are free, the next 50 registrations are 50% off, and the following 25 registrations are 25% off. A full-price, race-day registration will be open from 7:30-8:30 a.m. Cash or Zeffy payments will be accepted.

Your participation helps the NH Sneaker Brigade cover event expenses, support community initiatives and charitable giving, and continue growing wellness opportunities through the brigade.

Hands-only CPR session

LONDONDERRY, Vt. – Seventy percent of out-of-hospital cardiac arrests happen in the home. Statistically speaking, if you are called on to give CPR in an emergency, you will most likely be trying to save the life of someone you love: a spouse, a parent, a child, or a friend.

Neighborhood Connections is pleased to bring to the community an opportunity to learn about and practice hands-only CPR. This method is effective and can significantly increase the chances of survival for the victim, especially in the first few minutes of cardiac arrest. It is simple to learn and can be performed by anyone, even without formal CPR training.

Join on Friday, Nov. 6, at 12 p.m., for a session at Neighborhood Connections' new activity center, across from its offices at 5700 Route 100 in Londonderry, Vt. The one-hour session is free, and will be followed with light refreshments.

For more information or to RSVP, please call Neighborhood Connections at 802-824-4343 to reserve a spot. Lunch will be provided.

For questions about the program, contact: Suzanne Burge at 802-824-4343 or Suzanne@ncvermont.org.

Windsor County holds two of Vermont's 10 most haunted places

REGION – With Halloween approaching, two Windsor County places rank among Vermont's 10 most haunted in HauntBound's 2026 index, including Springfield's Hartness House Inn at No. 1. The index ranks 34 Vermont sites by separate published accounts and how far back they go, not by fame or search popularity.

The Hartness House Inn in Springfield ranked No. 1 most haunted in Vermont.
PHOTO PROVIDED

The Hartness House Inn ranks No. 1, and no Vermont site has more separate published accounts. James Hartness, a Vermont governor and inventor, built the mansion in 1904, with an underground office and observatory linked by a 240-foot tunnel; aviator Charles Lindbergh stayed in the corner room in 1927. Four separate published accounts describe activity there, the earliest dated to 1927. Guests in that room report a benign child presence known as Charlie, and staff describe a sense of being watched in the basement; the tunnel is linked to electricity cutting out and objects turning up elsewhere.

West Hartford Railroad Bridge ranks No. 8. On Feb. 5, 1887, a Vermont Central night express derailed and caught fire after falling onto the frozen White River, killing roughly 37 people in Vermont's deadliest train accident; Dartmouth's Robert Fletcher later traced it to a broken axle. Three separate published accounts describe activity there. Visitors describe the smell of burning wood with no apparent source and cries at night said to echo the wreck.

Statewide, Emily's Bridge in Stowe, the state's most famous haunted site, ranks No. 6.

"We rank by evidence, not legend: independent published accounts, documented history, and how far back the reports go. We don't claim ghosts are real, or that they aren't. We document where the reports concentrate, and we show our work," said Ben Fineman, editor of HauntBound. The ranking shows each site's documented record.

The Hartness House Inn, 109 Front Street in Springfield, is a working inn; guests can also visit the underground tunnel and observatory. West Hartford Railroad Bridge is visible from Route 14 in West Hartford; view from public areas only, and stay off the active rail line.

The full rankings can be found at www.hauntbound.com/most-haunted/vermont.

Annual hearse house and vault opening

SAXTONS RIVER, Vt. – On Sunday, Nov. 1, from 11 a.m. – 3 p.m., at the Saxtons River Cemetery, the Saxtons River Historical Society (SRHS) and Town of Rockingham Cemetery Committee will host the annual late-fall gathering at the hearse house and historic cemetery vault. The horse-drawn hearse built in Saxtons River will be featured along with other local history and opportunities for engagement with the museum in Saxtons River and cemetery activities throughout Rockingham.

The Saxtons River Cemetery hearse house.

The first unveiling of the Saxtons River hearse and revamped hearse house occurred in 1996, through the efforts of Al Neff. By 2000, he completed restoration of the burial vault to house the museum's collection of farm implements and blacksmith tools.

This year's opening is more ambitious than those in recent years. Volunteers will be donning vintage clothing from the SRHS collection, there will be presentations regarding the aspects of the cemetery and the meeting house that once stood in front of the Saxtons River cemetery. The Old South Meeting House in Saxtons River was built in 1810 as a nonsectarian union meeting house. It served as the worship site for several congregations, a schoolhouse for public and private education, a club house, and finally a storage facility. It was razed in 1974. Only brick remnants indicate its original location.

Similarly, the cemetery committee will be discussing the 19th-century fountain and the opportunity to help redesign that area within the Saxtons River Cemetery in the coming months.

"Our annual event is growing bigger. For 30 years, people have enjoyed seeing the hearse and visiting the tool museum in the historic vault. This year, with the help of our outstanding board members and the Rockingham Cemetery Committee, there is so much more to share. There will be something of interest to everyone, including stories about village history, lives of past citizens, and memories of the iconic Old South Meeting House," said SRHS board member Connie Lancaster.

The Saxtons River Historical Society, established in 1966, is committed to preserving local history through active collection management, educational programs, and maintaining the historic building. The society relies on community support to sustain its efforts in conservation and public engagement. To learn more about the historical society, visit www.saxtonsriverhistory.org or www.facebook.com/SaxtonsRiverHistoricalSociety. The Town of Rockingham Cemetery Committee is an all-volunteer group that fosters the wellbeing of the five town cemeteries through research, advocacy, planning, and public engagement. "True Crime Stories of Vermont" author talk SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – Join the Springfield Town Library on Saturday, Nov. 7, at 11 a.m., and meet Vermont author and historian Thea Lewis for a fascinating look at the darker side of the Green Mountain State.

In her latest book, "True Crime Stories of Vermont," Lewis explores more than a century of mayhem, mystery, and murder – from criminals living double lives and notorious serial killers, to an astonishing plot targeting a beloved pop star with a global fan base.

During this engaging author talk, Lewis will peel back Vermont's reputation for wholesomeness and rural charm to uncover the intriguing – and sometimes chilling – stories hiding beneath the surface. Drawing on her extensive research, she'll share the real-life characters, crimes, and unexpected twists that bring Vermont's history to life.

True Crime Stories of Vermont is Lewis' seventh book with The History Press. Her other works include "Haunted Burlington," "Ghosts and Legends of Lake Champlain," "Haunted Inns and Ghostly Getaways of Vermont," and "Wicked Vermont." She is also the author of the children's book "There's a Witch in My Sock Drawer."

A Vermont native, Lewis created Queen City Ghostwalk, Burlington's original haunted tour, in 2002. A historian and author, she has developed historic tours throughout the Burlington and Montpelier areas, and has earned the nickname "Vermont's Queen of Halloween."

Lewis' passion for storytelling extends beyond nonfiction. In 2024, she won the Vermont Writers' Prize for her short work of fiction "Farm Boy."

Come hear Lewis share the stories she has uncovered through years of research, and discover the wicked, haunted, and true-crime history lurking in the Green Mountain State.

HEALTH & SERVICES

Dear Editor,

On Sept. 15, Dartmouth Health announced it would lay off 124 workers and eliminate 303 open positions, most of them at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center in Lebanon, N.H., and its clinics. The same day, UVM Health said it would cut nearly 200 positions. Vermont Public reported both announcements, along with the system's loss of $63.5 million in the first half of 2026, as reported in June by the Valley News.

Coverage of cuts like these tends to focus on patients, and it should. But there is a second group worth thinking about this winter: the nurses, physicians, technicians, and administrators who are still there.

When a system trims open positions, the work those positions would have done does not disappear. It gets absorbed. The nurse covers one more shift. The physician carries a heavier panel. The manager who had to deliver the layoff news goes home and does not sleep. In a small community, that manager may then run into a laid-off colleague in the grocery store on Saturday.

That is a recipe for burnout, and burnout in health care is not new. What makes rural burnout harder is what happens when someone tries to get help.

Physicians have a specific fear here. A 2017 study in Mayo Clinic Proceedings surveyed 5,829 physicians and found that nearly 40% would be reluctant to seek formal care for a mental health condition because of concerns about their medical license. In my clinical work, nurses and other licensed staff describe similar worries. Add a small town, where the therapist's waiting room might be next to your patient's, and many simply do not go.

There is also a scheduling problem that rarely gets named. A clinician working rotating shifts, covering for an empty position, often cannot promise to be anywhere at the same hour every week. The standard model of therapy, 50 minutes once a week, assumes exactly that.

A Cerevity white paper, "Why Standard Therapy Fails: The Case for Longer Therapy Sessions," lays out what it calls the "dose-and-depth model." The idea is simple. Instead of starting with the weekly hour, start with four questions: how much total therapy the person needs, how much uninterrupted time the material requires, how the sessions should be spaced, and whether the format fits the person's actual life. For someone on a chaotic schedule, a few longer sessions spaced around their rotation can be easier to keep, and kept appointments are the ones that help.

None of this replaces what hospitals owe their staff. But there are things health workers in southern Vermont and the Upper Valley can do now.

Notice the signs early. Short sleep, a shorter temper, dreading the drive in, and feeling numb about patients you used to care about are all worth taking seriously before they become a crisis.

Ask what your employer's program actually records and who sees it. Many people avoid help because they assume the worst. Some of those assumptions are wrong, and some are not. Knowing which is which is worth a phone call.

Look outside your own building. Telehealth means a nurse in Ludlow or a physician in Windsor can see a licensed therapist who has never treated a colleague and will never sit next to them at a town meeting.

Ask for a schedule that fits. It is reasonable to ask a therapist about longer or less frequent sessions if weekly hours are impossible with your shifts.

Talk to one person. Not the whole unit. One.

The people who held our hospitals together through the last several years are now being asked to do more with less, again. Their work deserves notice. So does their health.

Sincerely,
Martha Fernandez

Douglas A. Devereux, 1948-2026

INVERNESS, Fla. – Douglas Allen Devereux passed away on Oct. 19, at the age of 78, in Inverness, Fla. He was born on July 19, 1948, to Allen Devereux and Hazel Ellis, at the old Rutland Hospital on Nichols Street. He grew up over the Belmont General Store that his parents operated. His early school years were spent at the one-room schoolhouse in Belmont Village that four generations of his family attended. Doug graduated in 1968 from Black River High School in Ludlow and served in the Vermont Army National Guard. He was employed with GE until he started Doug Devereux & Sons in the early 1980s. He also worked winters for many decades at Okemo.

Doug married Lynnette Cole on May 30, 1970. They built several homes in town over the years. They also became snowbirds in 2014, and have been spending winters at their home in Florida. He had been a longtime member of Colfax Lodge No. 21, IOOF in Belmont, and the Mount Holly Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad. Doug was passionate about old vehicles and enjoyed working on them. He loved going to car shows. He was a lover of Fords. He could often be seen driving his dump truck, which he drove well into his 70s.

To the Editor:

My letter is in support of Tom Charlton for reelection to the Vermont House of Representatives for Athens, Chester, Grafton, and Windham. Several other concerned citizens have written all about him, so I will try to amplify why I think you might want to vote for him to continue in another term in Monpelier.

He has a post-and-beam business that gives him a leg up when talking about the cost, permitting, quality control, and scheduling for new housing construction and rehabilitation of existing housing.

From what I have heard, he stood up pretty well in his debut and learned his way around the Capitol. The fact that he held his own in the legislature and maintained his business and paid his bills and taxes would be enough praise to earn my vote.

In addition, he is a fiscal conservative, which the legislature really needs a lot more of.

As I've had a long career as a land surveyor and real estate broker, I have acquired an eye for judging people's character, and Tom is, in my opinion, solid, dependable, and dedicated to what is best for Vermont.

Please consider a vote for Tom so he can continue his good work.

Sincerely,
Philip E. Atwood,
Chester, Vt.

Dear Editor,

Tom Charlton is not running for a national office.

He is not a torchbearer for President Trump, nor is he one who would misrepresent himself by using the wrong color on his sign as some have accused.

Our issues are more severe than the color of signs.

Is Tom a Republican? Yes, a Republican who seeks common sense solutions for housing, cost of living, access to healthcare, quality education, public safety, and repeal of Act 181.

He is seeking to ease the housing crisis as a member of the Housing Committee. He is a proponent of low-cost, minimum government solutions: establishment of the Vermont Land Bank, which would make abandoned properties available; and bulk purchasing of modular housing, with bulk savings being passed along to small local contractors and the VHIP Program that makes 5- and 10-year forgivable loans available as matching funds for rehabilitation or creation of rental units.

Tom has worked hard in eliminating noncompete clauses in traveling nurse and physician contracts so they can stay in Vermont if they so choose, thus potentially eliminating some of the high costs of traveling professionals. He is working hard to once again allow association health insurance formally available through groups like chambers of commerce.

Let's have a common sense approach and reelect Tom Charlton, someone who is knowledgeable, experienced, and familiar with the landscape.

Sincerely,
Jerry Gleason

Dear Editor,

I would like to recognize and thank the Ludlow Town Highway "road crew" for their recent work on South Hill Road. Their efforts to clean drainage ditches, fortify culverts, and mulch disturbed areas will ensure rainfall properly drains off the road and away from driveways, thereby protecting critical infrastructure and natural resources. The Vermont Transportation Grants in Aid program helped fund this project. Thank you for your dedication to excellence, Supervisor Ron Tarbell, Chris Barlow, Jaycob Palmer, Donnie Roys, Scott Tatro, Dennis VanGuilder, and Raymond Wood.

Dear Editor,

We often measure access to healthcare by how close a hospital is, how many specialists it employs, or whether a patient can eventually obtain an appointment. My family's experience taught me that access means something more: Can a patient get the care and communication they need when they need it?

My husband suffered a serious posterior-circulation stroke in October 2025. Because Dartmouth Hitchcock Medical Center (DHMC) is a comprehensive stroke center, we expected that specialty follow-up would be timely and that the system would help guide his recovery.

Instead, we were told that the specialty service was "booking out." We waited months for an appointment. In the meantime, we had no meaningful way to communicate directly with any neurologist, including the physician who would eventually be responsible for his neurological care. His first specialty appointment was approximately four months after his stroke.

Then we experienced a striking contrast.

A referral was called in to Massachusetts General Hospital. Within three weeks, an appointment was offered. Once the appointment was established, we also had access to Patient Gateway, allowing immediate communication with the neurologist and care team before the visit.

And this was not an isolated experience. When we sought care through Rutland Regional Medical Center, Northeast Eye Center, Alice Peck Day Hospital, Weeks and Gowen Physical Therapy, and Mount Ascutney Hospital, referrals were met with prompt responses and appointments within days or weeks, rather than months. Everyone we spoke with at those agencies responded with caring, empathy, and a focus on alleviating our concerns and answering our questions.

The difference was not simply geography or technology. It was responsiveness.

Mass General is a major academic medical center, but Alice Peck Day and Mount Ascutney are regional hospitals serving the same general population. Yet each demonstrated that a referral can be acknowledged, acted upon, and converted into timely care. At DHMC, we were left waiting for months because the service was "booking out," without providing access to the physician during that interval.

But there is another troubling dimension to this experience. DHMC is a teaching hospital. Medical students, interns, residents, and fellows learn not only from textbooks and lectures, but by observing how the healthcare system responds to patients. What lesson does a system teach when a patient with significant neurological deficits can be told to wait months because the service is "booking out"?

Patients should not have to accept delayed care simply because a medical center is busy. Being busy is a reality of healthcare; making patients bear the consequences of that reality is a choice.

Teaching hospitals have an obligation to model the professional values they expect future physicians to carry into practice: timely attention to patient needs, continuity, communication, clinical responsibility, and advocacy for patients who cannot navigate the system themselves. If trainees repeatedly see patients waiting months for specialty care, unable to communicate with a physician, while the explanation is simply that the service is busy, what are they learning about the standard of care? The lesson should never be that "busy" is an acceptable reason to stop being accessible.

For a patient recovering from a stroke, months are not an insignificant amount of time. Neurological recovery, rehabilitation, secondary stroke prevention, and evaluation of persistent or changing symptoms all depend on timely access to appropriate care. Medical research shows that rehabilitation therapies during the first few months after a stroke have the potential of significantly improved outcomes. But we were still waiting for a neurologist during that period – no functional evaluation, interventions, or therapy.

This experience made me question what we mean when we say that New Hampshire has "world-class healthcare close to home." Having highly qualified specialists in a medical center is not the same as having access to those specialists. A patient can live minutes from a comprehensive stroke center and still face a four-month wait for meaningful specialty care. Meanwhile, referrals to five other healthcare organizations – both academic and community-based – were addressed within days or weeks.

We should not confuse having an appointment with having access to care.

True access means timely appointments, communication with the clinical team, continuity, and a system that remains engaged with the patient while he or she is waiting.

This matters particularly for patients with serious or time-sensitive conditions. A waiting list is not simply an administrative inconvenience when the patient has unresolved neurological deficits and unanswered clinical questions. Patients should not have to choose between staying close to home and getting timely access to the medical care they need.

If our healthcare systems are going to compete on the promise of "world-class care," perhaps we should measure that promise by a simple question: When a patient needs a specialist, how long does it actually take to reach one, and what happens to that patient while they wait?

That is what access to healthcare should mean.

Sincerely,
Susan Boyer DNP, RN, FAAN

Dear Editor,

I am writing because I want to draw notice to Proposal 3, which will be voted on in the Nov. 3 election. It is critical that people understand why we need to further protect the rights of Vermonters to organize by enshrining those rights in our state constitution.

In this day and age, we are seeing attacks on the rights of states to organize and protect workers every day. The American Federation of Government Employees just this month won a victory against the presidential administration for trying to unlawfully restructure the United States Department of Agriculture. The National Weather Service, NASA, and other federal agencies are still in the process of fighting cuts that go against existing union contracts. When jobs are threatened, attacks on American industry play out daily, and pressure builds to lay large swaths of workers off in education and healthcare in our most hard-hit areas, it's critical that unions step up to protect those workers and the communities they serve. Vermonters should not wait until it's their job on the chopping block to act. Without protections, those benefits built on a hundred years of union organization such as sick leave, parental leave, overtime pay, hazard pay, and the right to seek redress when employees are wronged can be taken from us at any moment.

I value my membership in a Vermont union and take pride in being a union representative at my current worksite. I take seriously those protections entrusted to me and to my coworkers. Enshrining the right to organize protects all workers from retaliation, not just one group in one sector. Those in an existing union, and those looking to organize, all stand to benefit. When legislation is passed to protect the least of us, it protects all of us.

By considering Proposal 3, Vermont demonstrates how seriously it takes its role as a right to organize state. Vermonters pride themselves on looking out for their communities, and this legislation aims to do just that for all of us. That is why I ask all voting Vermonters to check the box and support passage of Proposal 3 this November.

Sincerely,
Heather Rigney
Springfield, Vt.

To the Editor:

I am writing to share my strong support for Andrea Murray for state Senate. I'm a North Springfield voter, and to be completely honest, it has been a long time since I felt truly excited about an election. Like so many of my neighbors, I am just trying to make ends meet, but between the high costs of groceries, electricity, and property taxes, it feels like we're running on a treadmill that keeps speeding up.

It feels like our incumbent Senate politicians are living in a completely different world. They pass expensive bills and debate grand ideas, while rural towns like ours get left holding the bag. It is frustrating when you feel like nobody is actually listening to you. We aren't asking for the world – we just need the state to stop making things harder. We need Vermont to be more affordable.

That's why I'm voting for Andrea Murray for state Senate. Andrea is a local business owner who actually understands our day-to-day struggles and is standing up to fight for our communities. Andrea is a local farmer – she is real, she is down-to-earth, and she actually listens to what regular working people are going through. She understands that for those of us who live in rural towns, every extra fee or tax hike hits our wallets hard.

One of the things I love most about her platform is her promise to fight to stop taxing Social Security benefits. For families like mine, cutting that tax means keeping money where it belongs – paying for groceries, medicine, and heat. That alone shows she understands the exact financial pressure our seniors and families are facing. We need leaders who will look at every piece of legislation through a simple lens: Will this make it easier or harder for a vulnerable Vermonter to stay in their home? Andrea has the practical mindset and the empathy needed to keep our communities affordable, accessible, and supportive.

I ask every one of you in the Windsor District who is tired of struggling every day to please get out and vote for Andrea Murray on Nov. 3. We need her to fight for us in Montpelier.

Sincerely,
Kimberly P. Meyer

Kimaya Diggs album release at Next Stage

PUTNEY, Vt. – Next Stage Arts Local & Global series presents Kimaya Diggs' "Green" album release, a love note to the New England landscape that showcases 12 tracks of glittering, genre-bending indie pop, on Friday, Oct. 30, at 7:30 p.m. Doors open at 6:45 p.m., at Next Stage Arts, 15 Kimball Hill in Putney. Tickets are discounted in advance at www.nextstagearts.org. The show is open to all ages.

Next Stage Arts is committed to presenting high-quality, innovative artists who are developing and performing new work, and to cultivating a vibrant, multigenerational arts community in rural southeastern Vermont. Presenting Diggs is a natural extension of these values. As an acclaimed singer-songwriter rooted in New England, whose work spans soul, R&B, folk, and indie rock, Diggs represents exactly the kind of artist Next Stage wants to champion: deeply talented, regionally connected, and at an exciting moment in her career with the release of her third studio album, "Green."

Diggs joins Next Stage through support from the New England Foundation for the Arts and its New England State Touring grant. As a part of this grant, Diggs will be visiting the Brattleboro Senior Center during its lunch time for a short performance, as well as some participatory songwriting activities.

Diggs is an artist at a pivotal and exciting moment in her career. Recently off tour dates with Mavis Staples, Emily King, and Trombone Shorty, Diggs has built a reputation as a performer who meets her audiences with intention and creates space for genuine emotional connection. Her passion lies in crafting live experiences where people can tap into their emotions together – moments of collective meaning that linger long after the music ends. The "Green" album release is a milestone that deserves to be celebrated across the region, and Next Stage is honored to be a part of that.

Presenting Diggs at Next Stage on Oct. 30 – just weeks after her album-release concert with Bombyx at the Academy of Music in Northampton – extends the momentum of that milestone into Vermont and introduces her to a new audience community. Rural southeastern Vermont has a deep and devoted live music culture, and Next Stage believes Diggs' sound and story will resonate powerfully here. This presentation will broaden her regional reach, deepen her connection to New England audiences, and demonstrate to the broader presenting community that her work translates beautifully across different venues and communities.

This engagement also reflects a shared vision with Bombyx for what broader regional artist development can look like; not just a single booking, but the beginning of a longer relationship. Next Stage hopes this tour becomes a model for future collaborations: routing artists across the two organizations, supporting residencies, and helping early-career musicians build the kind of sustained regional presence that allows their careers to grow. With audiences aging and dwindling across New England, arts organizations need to be cultivating not only the next generation of performing artists, but also the next generation of audiences – and Diggs' work does both.

Spencer Hollow Cemetery hike

SPRINGFIELD, Vt. – Join Friends of Skitchewaug (FOS) on Saturday, Oct. 31, for a hike to the historic cemetery on the old Crown Point Road. This moderately difficult walk will start at 10 a.m., at Ferguson Farm, 220 Spencer Hollow Road, and traverse through meadows and some relatively steep sections to the cemetery in the woods. Make new friends and mix with your neighbors as you celebrate the wildlife, natural beauty, and historic character of the Crown Point Road and Spencer Hollow neighborhood.

Longtime residents Brent LeDrew and Larry Drasler will contribute their knowledge of the history of the Crown Point Road and the cemetery itself.

Bug spray and sunscreen are a good idea, as are boots that can get wet as you walk through several culverts.

Keith and Gail Ferguson have generously offered use of their pavilion as the gathering point for the hike (park at the base of the pavilion) and as a place for lunch and refreshment afterwards. Bring your own lunch/drink to enjoy in the pavilion, or come around 12:30 p.m. to chat with neighbors after the hike.

Efficiency Vermont Energy Leadership Awards

KILLINGTON, Vt. – More than 190 people gathered at the Killington Grand Resort Hotel for the 15th annual Best Practices Exchange (BPX) on Sept. 23 and 24. Efficiency Vermont's yearly event brings together the state's largest commercial and industrial operations and businesses to share insights on energy efficiency and reducing energy costs.

Five Energy Leadership Awards honored projects and partners that demonstrated excellence in energy efficiency. The winners ranged from college campuses, to manufacturers, to innovative wood heating systems. The award-winning projects are among the commercial and industrial efficiency efforts in 2025 that will save Vermont businesses $78 million over their lifetimes.

This year's event assembled leaders from industries like healthcare, manufacturing, education, agriculture, hospitality/tourism, and Vermont's ski industry. Executives, facilities managers, and mechanical contractors met to discuss projects and share expertise. Presenters and installers shared energy-saving technologies and solutions, and 21 sponsors and vendors demonstrated equipment, industrial systems, and related technologies.

Efficiency Vermont Managing Director Peter Walke surveyed attendees about the biggest barriers they faced to completing energy projects. Many cited challenges like funding, costs, and inflation. Other barriers were operational constraints like staffing, labor, and time. Several said return on investment or changing federal policies created barriers. "This all means one thing: extend uncertainty," Walke concluded. "That's why investing in energy efficiency is always a good idea. Because efficiency gives you control – on costs, on runtimes, on fuel and energy use – when so many other things are out of your control."

The benefits of efficiency from Vermont's commercial and industrial sector go beyond saving $78 million. In partnership with Efficiency Vermont, projects completed in 2025 will save 386 million kilowatt-hours (kWh) of electricity over their lifetimes. That's enough to power 5,600 homes for a decade. The projects will also save enough fuel to heat more than 12,000 homes for a year.

Five Energy Leadership Awards were presented to individuals and organizations whose work exemplified industry-leading energy efficiency. The winners of the 2026 BPX Energy Leadership Awards are listed below.

– Impact Award: Vermont State University (VTSU). VTSU partnered with Efficiency Vermont on energy projects across its five campuses. The Castleton campus started with a "controls treasure hunt" that found numerous low- and no-cost improvements that reduced energy costs by $150,000. A campus-wide LED lighting upgrade will save Castleton an additional $168,000 annually. The Johnson campus completed a comprehensive controls optimization project, saving $250,000 a year. The Lyndon campus also upgraded to LEDs campus-wide, saving $64,500 annually. And the Randolph campus modernized its meat processing facility's refrigeration system, saving more than $8,000 a year. Combined, these projects will save more than $600,000 annually, allowing VTSU to direct more resources to support students and academic programs.

– Changemaker Award: Vermont Glove in Randolph. Owner and President Sam Hooper made strategic investments in energy efficiency to reduce operating costs and strengthen his company's future. A major energy improvement project at its 1920s manufacturing facility replaced an ancient coal boiler with an advanced wood pellet heating system. Adding insulation and air sealing cut the facility's air leakage by 50%. A new addition was designed with a tight building envelope and high-efficiency heat pumps for heating and cooling. The company applied the same approach to workforce housing, weatherizing Randolph's Windover House, and converting it from oil heat to wood pellet heating. These investments lowered operating costs while improving comfort, productivity, and sustainability.

– Innovation Award: Londonderry Village Market. Operated by Associated Grocers of New England, the Londonderry Village Market has taken a "continuous improvement" approach to reducing energy use and operating costs. Early efforts focused on refrigerant leak detection and repairs, followed by new high-efficiency refrigeration cases and an LED lighting retrofit. These efforts resulted in more than $40,000 in energy savings per year. The market then turned to its aging HVAC system and partnered with Efficiency Vermont, Turner Piping and Refrigeration, and Green Mountain Power. By installing a dual-fuel heat pump rooftop unit, the market electrified much of its heating and cooling needs while reducing fossil fuel use. Now, Londonderry Village Market is ready for future energy management solutions, and Associated Grocers of New England is evaluating similar upgrades at its other markets throughout Vermont.

– Energy Champion: Shawn Briggs with Vermont Composites in Bennington. Since 2024, Briggs has led companywide efforts to reduce energy costs through operational changes, employee engagement, and facility improvements. He championed a facility-wide "turn it off" campaign that increases awareness by encouraging employees to shut down ovens, lights, and production machinery when not in use. Briggs also led improvements in lighting, HVAC systems, refrigeration systems, and added programmable thermostats in office areas. By championing a compressed air leak audit and facility-wide submetering, Briggs now has energy usage data to inform future projects. These efforts help Vermont Composites save $107,000 annually while developing a culture of energy stewardship.

– Partner of the Year: Morton Bailey and Lyme Green Heat in Lyme, N.H. A member of Efficiency Vermont's Efficiency Excellence Network (EEN) since 2017, Morton and his team have helped schools, municipalities, and businesses transition to high-performance, advanced wood heating systems with a focus on efficiency, performance, and reliability. The company has worked with Efficiency Vermont to support improvements to enhance wood heating system performance, simplify maintenance, and improve customer satisfaction. Lyme Green Heat is also strengthening regional wood fuel supplies by developing a pellet manufacturing facility at a former lumber mill. These efforts ensure a dependable, regional supply of pellet fuel, support local jobs and economic growth, and demonstrate leadership in advancing the region's renewable energy future.

The history of victory gardens

REGION – Home gardens have long been an integral part of our communities. From the kitchen gardens of early colonial days to the American Revolution when herbs such as lemon balm and mint were grown as a substitute for imported tea, and during all the years that followed, people kept gardens for food, medicine, and other needs.

When America entered World War I, home gardens took on new importance. "Liberty gardens" became patriotic acts to help feed a nation at war. During World War II, the federal government called them "victory gardens" and campaigned for their establishment across the country. Families were also urged to raise "victory flocks" of chickens for eggs and meat.

While a home victory garden was deemed patriotic, it was also a necessity for many. A shortage of imported fertilizer combined with fewer available workers and, at times, poor weather contributed to lower production of some crops even as demand increased. Much of the food produced was processed and shipped overseas for the war effort, causing shortages and limited availability at home. Gasoline, tires, and other supplies were directed to military use, causing difficulty or delays in distribution of food to grocery stores.

Scarcity led to rationing. Imported items such as sugar, coffee, and cooking oils could only be purchased when presenting an appropriate ration coupon. Familiar foods such as butter, meat, milk, eggs, and many vegetables also required ration coupons to purchase, though having a ration coupon didn't guarantee an item would be available. To feed their families, Americans not only embraced the idea of victory gardens, they provided 10 billion pounds of produce from more than 20 million such gardens during the war.

A victory garden could be an already established plot in the backyard, a newly dug patch in place of the front lawn, a vacant lot in the neighborhood, or even a rooftop. If there was soil, water, and sunshine, almost any space might become a garden.

Crops grown in victory gardens were selected for their nutritional value, calories to provide energy, and ability to be stored or preserved. Potatoes, sweet potatoes, peas, tomatoes, cucumbers, onions, beans, carrots, turnips, radishes, beets, and greens such as lettuce, chard, and spinach all had a place in a victory garden. Succession planting was encouraged.

After World War II, when food supplies stabilized and ration books became a thing of the past, it became easier for people to purchase what was needed rather than grow it themselves. Most victory gardens were abandoned, but not all. Through the efforts of gardeners and their supporters, two World War II-era victory gardens continue to operate.

According to the National Park Service, Fenway Victory Gardens in Boston, Mass., was established in 1942. Now known as the Richard D. Parker Memorial Victory Gardens, it encompasses 7.5 acres of land with more than 500 garden plots. In Minneapolis, Minn., the Dowling Victory Garden was started in 1943 as a neighborhood victory garden. Renamed the Dowling Community Garden, it's housed on three acres of land and includes nearly 200 plots.

Today, the victory garden lives on in the home garden, whether it's a plot in the backyard or a collection of pots on a balcony. Community gardens are springing up across the country, empowering people who are without the ability to garden at home to grow their own food.
